Kayla Green joins United Way as Director of People and Culture

Anchorage AK – Kayla Green has joined United Way of Anchorage as Director of People and Culture. This is a new position that demands sound business judgment with people skills and a practical passion for equity, diversity, inclusion, and access both at work and in the wider community. Ms. Green’s role is to help build an organization that both responds to an ever-changing Anchorage and achieves United Way’s constant mission to improve lives.

Most recently Ms. Green has worked as a human resources and business development consultant and as a realtor with Keller Williams in Eagle River. She has worked as a daily operations manager and health benefit enrollment specialist at Southcentral Foundation. She also worked as a supervisor and trainer and mental health specialist at North Star Behavioral Health. Ms. Green serves as 1st vice president of the Anchorage chapter of the NAACP and is a member of the State of Alaska Board for Marriage and Family Therapy.

“We’re delighted that Kayla Green has brought her commitment and range of experience in human resources, business development, health care and equity to fortify United Way in its community mission,” said Clark Halvorson, president of United Way. “Her work is key to that mission both in-house and across Anchorage.”

“I’m very excited to be joining United Way and look forward to helping the organization grow successfully,” Ms. Green said. “One of the key success factors of high performing organizations is putting their people first. My main focus is to develop efficient and effective, simple yet powerful solutions to the people side of United Way.”

Ms. Green earned a master’s degree in human resources at the Jon M. Huntsman School of Business at Utah State University in 2014 and a bachelor’s degree in psychology at Brigham Young University-Idaho in 2011.
